a system of thought, a religion, or a culture, it is necessary to learn to see the world through the eyes of the other to the extent that one is able. The course will look at the manner in which different schoo of Islamic thought and practice have dealt with religious others, specifically Christianity, Judaism, Hindu traditions, Buddhism, and the Chinese religions. This historical and theological foundation will serve as the foundation for examining the manner in which new discourses on religious diversity are being developed in the contemporary period by Muslim intellectuals and scholars and how they relate to global issues of identity, otherness, and pluralism. The evaluation of religious claims to absolute truth, the wish, Christia and Islamic prospective of pluralism, the attitudes and practices of believers and Holy Scriptures in the context of pluralism. The evaluation of religious claims to absolute truth elwish, Christia and Islamic prospective of pluralism, the attitudes and practices of believers and Holy Scriptures in the context of pluralism. The evaluation of religious pluralism, and the relations between interreligious dialogue and mission started after the Second Vatica Council, especially by (Catholic) Christians that started influencing the whole world. By the end of the course, students should also be able to understand the multiplicity of ways in which Muslims have theorized religious difference and approached religious others, through specific disciplinary methodologies and interpretations and through historical encounters. Students should also be able to draw their own conclusions about the possibilities of engagement between Muslims and others in the contemporary world. 19 Contribution of the Course to Professional Development: The course provides an understanding and perspective on the framework of coexistence of different religious and ethnic communities in terms of religion and tradition in the context of pluralism and diversity. 20 Learning Outcomes: 1 To seek an answer to the ques	18	Objective of the Course:	and its p discussi rights of discusse tradition realities. The guiding premise is that in order to understand the other, whether it is a system of thought, a religion, or a culture, it is necessary to learn to see the world through the eyes of the other to the extent that one is able. The course will look at the manner in which different schools of Islamic thought and practice have dealt with religious others, specifically Christianity, Judaism, Hindu traditions, Buddhism, and the Chinese religions. This historical and theological foundation will serve as the foundation for examining the manner in which new discourses on religious diversity are being developed in the contemporary period by Muslim intellectuals and scholars and how they relate to global issues of identity, otherness, and pluralism. The evaluation of religious claims to absolute truth, the Jewish, Christian and Islamic prospective of pluralism, the attitudes and practices of believers and Holy Scriptures in the context of pluralism, the discussion of the issue that whether all religions guide to the truth in the context of revelation, ethnic and cultural identity in the determination of religious pluralism, and the relations between interreligious dialogue and mission started after the Second Vatican Council, especially by (Catholic) Christians that started influencing the whole world. By the end of the course, students should be able to understand the multiplicity of ways in which Muslims have theorized religious difference and approached religious others, through specific disciplinary methodologies and interpretations and through historical encounters.
